

Keeping Relations

For sometime, in some meetings and assemblies of Britain's foreign trade there are unbelievable and unfavorable rumors about dominant atmosphere in trade relations of the two countries that is unprecedented in the long history of the two countries commercial relations.

It seems that such rumors are baseless while it is said that the two countries political relations have become critical but we can see that their commercial relations have been expanded. Therefore, there is no doubt these baseless rumors are due to the political-economic conditions dominated in the region and country that will be resolved sooner or later.

But along with these rumors, good news arrives from here and there and offers bright prospects of the two countries economic relations and that is remarkable interest of some Britain pundits and capital owners in traveling to Iran with the aim of keeping trade relations of the two countries on one hand and an excessive interest of Iranian businessmen in doing business with British merchants on the other hand.

In these situations giving incentive to keep and develop the trade relations of Iran and Britain is the first and the most important duty of two countries' joint chambers of commerce and they should do their best to accomplish the job.

Consequently, IBCCIM in Tehran and BICC in London should prepare the aforementioned incentive to sustain and expand the trade relations of the two countries by dispatching business delegations, setting up the group meetings, visiting facilities, spectacular places and economic centers of the two countries and eventually acquainting the businessmen of two countries with each other more and more.

Editorial